PROMISES MADE, PROMISES KEPT BRIAN SCHWEITZER, GOVERNOR

STATE OF MONTANA AND TRIBAL NATIONS WORKING GOVERNMENT TO GOVERNMENT A FINAL REPORT – 2005 TO 2012

OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR STATE OF MONTANA

BRIAN SCHWEITZER GOVERNOR

JOHN BOHLINGER LT. GOVERNOR

September 15, 2012

I am honored to present to you "Promises Made, Promises Kept," the final Tribal Relations Report of the Schweitzer Administration. I am proud of our work over the years and am grateful for the friendships and partnerships I've made in Indian Country.

Never in Montana's history has an entire Administration reached out to Indians to ensure they were acknowledged, respected, and most importantly, included. As the First Montanans and the largest minority group in the State of Montana, it is only right that Indians be a significant part of all that we do. The effort we have made is one for the history books; its impact is life changing, and it is one in which my entire Administration takes great pride.

Indians have played a major role in my Administration from day one. They lead departments, provide sound policy advice, run programs, and work tirelessly on my behalf to stay connected to tribal leaders, members, and communities throughout Montana. During my Administration, just over 250 Indians have been appointed to boards, councils and commissions – more than the total of all 22 previous Administrations combined. The active and thoughtful participation of these Indian appointees has undoubtedly contributed to the success of our Administration and our state.

I am excited to be able to offer a summary of many of the accomplishments of our last eight years. Jobs have been created, reservation communities have grown, and numerous small businesses have been started helping put Montana in a strong position – economically and financially.

I am hopeful that future Governors will foster and preserve the important relationships that have been built these past eight years with the governing bodies of each Tribal Nation. My experience clearly demonstrates that by working together we can get more done and ultimately move all of Montana forward.

As you read this report, I hope you gain insight into the effort, the commitment, and the dedication of the Schweitzer Administration to do our very best to make a difference – for Indian Country and for our entire state.

Warm regards,

BRIAN SCHWEITZER Governor

"It was about eight years ago that I said to you, if you will trust me, we can create a new Montana, a Montana where we respect one another."

– Governor Brian Schweitzer

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

The Governor's Tribal Relations Report is written annually and is due September 15 of each year in fulfillment of Montana Code Annotated 2-15-143 to highlight the State of Montana's major activities and interactions with each of the Indian Nations in Montana.

Over the past eight years, the State of Montana has seen unprecedented gubernatorial leadership that has brought a historic change with regard to the State-Tribal relationship. The Governor's 2012 Tribal Relations Report records the Schweitzer Administration's historic efforts, policy changes and major accomplishments in Indian Country during the years 2005 through 2012.

Recognition is given as to the significance of the return of the buffalo to the Fort Peck and Fort Belknap Tribes.

"Governance," describes how the Schweitzer Administration has paved the way for the State of Montana to strengthen State-Tribal relations. This section highlights policies and strategies implemented to help change the way business is conducted with tribes at all levels of State government, such as working to improve communications and providing cultural awareness training to state employees. This section also encompasses a complete listing of over 250 Governor's Indian appointments to boards, councils and commissions over the course of the past eight years.

"Economic Development," describes state programs and initiatives that have stimulated economic and infrastructure development in Indian Country.

"Education and Training," features governmental education programs that work to educate Montana's youth on the unique Indian culture and history, specifically Indian Education For All. This section also describes state government resources providing academic support and career guidance to enhance economic security and opportunities in Indian Country.

"Health and Safety," highlights the major policy changes and their impact on the delivery of health and safety services to Indian people. This section also discusses various state government safety awareness and emergency response programs and resources.

"Natural Resources," features the positive outcome of numerous efforts and cooperative projects with tribal governments involving environmental stewardship, land management, water rights and sacred places.

Appendix "A", is a comprehensive list of over 450 agreements, negotiations and collaborative efforts with tribal governments that were in effect during the course of fiscal year 2012.

"They're Back"

"And, they are back to stay this time. They are back to be that symbol of pride not only for the Indian people but for this entire country."

- Governor Brian Schweitzer

March 19, 2012 is a day that is forever embedded in the minds of the Indian people. It was on this day, a day that many believed would never come, that 61 Yellowstone buffalo - the wildest and most genetically pure on this earth – came home to roam the prairies of the northern plains of Montana.

Governor Brian Schweitzer joining the Fort Belknap and Fort Peck Tribes as they announced the return of the buffalo

With this historic event, Governor Brian Schweitzer fulfilled his bold promise to bring the sacred animal back to this generation of Indian people.

The Governor knew the history of the buffalo. He believed that a part of the soul of Indians was taken when the buffalo were annihilated over a century ago. He recognized the cultural value and the profound connection between Indian people and this magnificent creature.

He understood the importance of the animals that had roamed the northern plains for centuries, feeding, sheltering, and sustaining the First Montanans in ways that allowed their survival through the harshest of times.

He also knew that if these buffalo were to be returned to their rightful place, it would be up to him.

After three years of repeated testing to ensure that the buffalo were brucellosis-free, an agreement was negotiated between the State of Montana and the Fort Peck Tribes to entrust the quarantined Yellowstone buffalo back to the Indian people.

In a collaborative effort to reintroduce the animals to lands beyond the borders of Yellowstone National Park, the buffalo were removed from captivity at Corwin Springs, loaded up, and hauled off to their new home.

"I am glad it is finally coming to where the buffalo actually get to be on the plains. They know they are home." – Robbie Magnan, Fort Peck Tribes Fish and Game Director

After receiving a proper welcome with blessing and song by members of the Assiniboine and Sioux Tribes, the buffalo were released onto the pastures of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation in northeastern Montana.

This initial herd of buffalo now constitutes what the Fort Peck Tribes calls its "cultural herd," a herd that is distinctly sacred from other herds owned by the tribe.

"We have an opportunity, a historic opportunity, to repopulate the entire Western United States in every place . . . every place that people desire to have this majestic animal back. This will be the place that will be the supply of these bison." – Governor Brian Schweitzer

The future will bring the relocation of half of this "cultural herd" to the lands of the Gros Ventre and Assiniboine Tribes, as Fort Belknap becomes the next Indian nation in the effort to restore geneticallypure buffalo to Montana's Indian reservations and throughout the Western United States.

With the birth of 21 baby buffalo shortly after the herd's arrival at Fort Peck comes hope for a new generation. The restoration of this iconic animal has begun and once again the buffalo will roam free.

"It's a special day. It is like the coming home of our prosperity." – Larry Wetsit, Vice President of Community Services, Fort Peck Community College

INAUGURATION

Governor Brian Schweitzer was sworn in as Montana's 23rd Governor on Monday, January 3, 2005.

He was the first Democrat elected since the late 1980s. As a rancher-farmer from Whitefish, he had never before held an elected political position and with those credentials pledged, "A New Day for Montana."

It was immediately clear for Native Americans and tribal governments that his pledge applied to them. It was more than words or a slogan, but with actions within minutes of the new Governor taking the oath of office. Indians were in the audience as his transition team had extended an unprecedented invitation for Native people to join in the traditional pomp and circumstance surrounding the inauguration of a Governor. And they proudly accepted the invitation.

Chief Earl Old Person was invited to say a prayer. In his Blackfeet language he called Governor Brian Schweitzer a "warrior" and then a group of Blackfeet hand drum singers sang an honor song usually offered for young natives as they go to serve this country in the military.

The new inclusion of native people continued when Governor Schweitzer spoke in his inaugural address and said:

"To those people who have hunted and fished our rivers for 400 generations, I say welcome to the front door of the Capitol of the State of Montana." – Governor Brian Schweitzer

The inaugural ceremony closed as drummers from all of the tribes in Montana began singing. Governor Schweitzer didn't just stand and listen but walked over to the drum, took a drum stick and began beating the drum with others as Lt. Governor John Bohlinger stood closely behind.

TRIBAL FLAGS

It is common in Indian country at significant times and ceremonies, that gifts are given. This practice was displayed on the first day of the Schweitzer Administration when each of the eight tribal nations in Montana presented the Governor with their tribal nation's flag.

The presentations were made by tribal leaders, tribal citizens and respected tribal elders. As the flags were presented, the Tribal nation's flag song, similar in nature to the United States national anthem, was sung as the drum guided the beat. When the presentations were done, the Governor promised the flags would fly next to the United States and State of Montana flags during his Administration.

The significance of this promise cannot be understated. It is believed that it is the first time in over 120 years since Montana became a state that the flags of the tribal nations have all flown together on the grounds of the State Capitol.

"The flags fly in the Governor's reception room and when people come to see the Governor, they see the flags of the First Nations of Montana and I apologize it has taken the State more than 100 years to do that, but we made it right."

– Governor Brian Schweitzer

The flags have had a prominent place throughout the entire Administration. They were the back drop during the 60 Minutes interview with Leslie Stahl and at every press conference held in the Governor's reception area. The table, when enacted legislation is signed into law, is placed directly in front of the flags. When visitors come and important meetings are conducted, the flags are proudly displayed.

"It is a great honor for us to present this flag on behalf of the Salish, Kootenai and Pend d'Oreille Tribes of the Flathead Nation. We know you'll fly it with the greatest respect."

– Fred Matt, Former Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribal Chairman

The promise Governor Schweitzer made was kept as the flags have flown in the Governor's Reception Room every day of his Administration, except for the few days when they were flown briefly at other locations, as it became known that the Governor's set of flags from the tribes in Montana are a rare and valuable collection.

INCLUSION

Inclusion of Native Americans began following Brian Schweitzer's election in November 2004.

He had campaigned in Indian country promising to include Indians in his Administration. He kept his promise when he appointed three Native Americans to his transition team. But wanting to do more, he also created a transition Tribal Leaders Advisory Council to formally consult with tribes on how to implement his promise to conduct the business between the two sovereign entities on a government to government basis.

Governor appointees Rhonda Whiting, who serves as a member and current Chair of the Northwest Power and Conservation Council, and Anna Whiting Sorrell, Director of the Department of Public Health and Human Services

"It moves my heart to be with the First Montanans. This is going to be an inclusive Administration."

- Governor Brian Schweitzer

When a Governor takes office, he makes about 40 gubernatorial appointments to his cabinet and personal staff. They are his decision alone and speak loudly about his values and commitments and the direction of his Administration. In Governor Schweitzer's initial appointments, he made history with 10% of his appointees being enrolled members of tribes in Montana. His historic cabinet level appointment of Confederated Salish and Kootenai enrolled tribal member Rhonda Whiting to the eight-member Northwest Power and Conservation Council was the first time a tribal person had ever been appointed to serve on that body. She continues to serve in that capacity today and was recently elected Chairperson.

The Governor's commitment to appoint Indians has continued. At times different tribal people, representing the Northern Cheyenne, the Gros Ventre and the Blackfeet have been appointed to work in the Governor's Office of Economic Development. He has prided himself by hiring the best and the brightest to the position of Director of Indian Affairs, after he signed legislation upgrading it to a cabinet level position.

"People in Montana need to know that Indian tribes are part of Montana."

> - Late Chairman Carl Venne, Crow Nation

In November 2008, after he was elected to a second term, he again made history by appointing the first Indian in the country to head a state health office. Anna Whiting Sorrell, an enrolled member of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes, serves as the Director of the Department of Public Health and Human Services.

TRIBAL VISITS

Governor Schweitzer with Tribal Chairman Willie Sharp, Jr. and Councilman Roger "Sassy" Running Crane at the Blackfeet Tribal Headquarters in Browning

From the beginning of his Administration, the Governor believed that to fully understand the diversity of Montana, he needed to be on the ground - meeting people on their own turf, getting to know them, and finding out what matters to them. That local perspective would help him make good decisions and develop sound policies for all of Montana.

In his first year of office, Governor Schweitzer visited all of Montana's 56 counties. He logged thousands of miles traveling to events and meeting people and leaders in every corner of Big Sky Country. The Indian reservations in Montana were included.

GOVERNANCE

"I will come to your reservation to meet in your tribal headquarters." – Governor Brian Schweitzer

The Governor promised tribal leaders that he wouldn't just invite them to come to Helena to meet, but he would go to their tribal council chambers; a place where he knew that the governing bodies of each Tribal Nation conduct their business. So he made his visits, not just once as others before him, but often. And while he was there, it wasn't just about talking with the tribal leaders, he always made an effort to visit tribal colleges, tribal events and celebrations being held at tribal gatherings, honorings and pow wows.

The number of his visits over the past eight years to Indian Country is too long to list but highlights include:

- Visiting the Salish Pend d'Oreille Cultural Committee in St. Ignatius;
- Attending Northern Cheyenne's Annual 4th of July Celebration and Pow Wow in Lame Deer;
- Touring the Zortman Landusky mine and Swift Gulch drainage area on the Fort Belknap Reservation;
- Hearing the concerns of Crow tribal members as the summer fires burned their lands;
- Conducting a fly over of the Rocky Boy's Reservation to see firsthand the devastation caused by floods;
- Participating in a groundbreaking ceremony in Poplar in recognition of the Fort Peck Tribes' desire to develop renewable energy;
- Meeting with the Blackfeet Tribal Business Council to discuss property tax issues; and
- Supporting the Little Shell Chippewa Tribe in their quest for federal recognition.

The Governor's visits developed lasting relationships with the individuals he met and a trust in the State of Montana to build programs, services and agreements to serve Indian people.

GOVERNOR'S AMERICAN INDIAN NATIONS COUNCIL (GAIN)

It was clear when Governor Schweitzer came into office that a consistent approach was needed to work with tribes. The Governor's office had one kind of approach. Often executive agencies had many different approaches depending on the type of services provided, kind of funding, or personal preferences of the state employee charged with delivering the program. It was impossible for tribes to meaningfully engage as the inconsistent approaches produced frustration and some would describe the relationship as "adversarial" at times.

"From this day forward, my Administration will have a steadfast approach when working with Tribal Nations."

– Governor Brian Schweitzer

To accomplish the Governor's direction, a high-level, coordinated approach was desired and the Governor's American Indian Nations Council (GAIN) was created by his first executive order.

Staff affiliated with the Governor's American Indian Nations Council (GAIN) provide legal advice and policy direction to the Governor's Office and the executive agencies. They oversee the State Tribal Activities Database (STAD), created for GAIN to track tribal agreements and contracts across state government. Over the past seven years, STAD has recorded thousands of agreements negotiated between the State and the Tribes.

Most Wednesday mornings, starting in early 2005, begin with a meeting of GAIN, where the Governor's key appointees including his chief of staff, budget director, director of Indian Affairs and policy advisors are charged with overseeing a statewide strategy to build the government to government relationship between the State of Montana and the governing bodies of each tribal nation. GAIN has assumed a key role in shaping the executive's policy, negotiating major agreements and supporting the strong relationship the Governor has built with the tribes.

OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Governor Schweitzer with Lesa Evers and Jennifer Perez Cole, both of whom have served in his cabinet as the Director of Indian Affairs (Photo by Guylaine Gelinas)

The Office of Indian Affairs was created in 1951. It has had varying influence in each Governor's Administration as the link between the State of Montana and Indian tribes and Indian people. There was never a doubt in the Schweitzer Administration of the importance of this office.

The Governor promised tribal leaders that this position would sit as part of his cabinet and would serve as a key advisor to himself, his key staff and those throughout state agencies. He kept the promise as his appointees were included in decision making regarding tribal issues, were instrumental in negotiations, traveled with the Governor to tribal locations and most importantly, were authorized to be the voice of the Administration in Indian Country.

"The Governor's Office of Indian Affairs has served a vital role during the Schweitzer Administration. Day in and day out they have worked hard to stay keenly connected to those in tribal communities and fulfill our promise to work in a respectful and genuine manner with Tribal Governments and Indian people all across Montana."

– Governor Brian Schweitzer

The Governor signed into law HB 193 which formally promoted the Coordinator of Indian Affairs to the Director of Indian Affairs, making the position commensurate with other members of the cabinet. This law officially ensures future Directors the level of access and influence Governor Schweitzer recognized was needed to effectively represent the needs and concerns of Indian people as they engage with the State.

From the start, the Office of Indian Affairs has been vital in communicating with tribes as the Governor asked that "we go to Indian Country, sit in tribal council chambers, and visit with tribal members." The lessons learned were then communicated to the state programs to ensure that services were provided and decisions were made government to government. This was done through the creation and maintenance of the Office of Indian Affairs website, by providing the annual tribal relations training to state employees, by developing the tribal relations handbook for state employees, by producing the tribal relations report, and by organizing and attending tribal visits to Helena and on every reservation across the State. Most importantly, the Indian Affairs office provided a place for tribal leaders to hang their coats, have a cup a coffee as they came through the front door of the State Capitol to advocate for their policies, just as the Governor promised in his inaugural address in 2005.

"I believe the most important thing we do is to build, foster and preserve meaningful relationships. These strong relationships provide a foundation that allows the state, tribes and Indian people to work together to get so much more accomplished."

- Lesa Evers, Acting Director of Indian Affairs

TRIBAL LEADERS SUMMIT

Governor Schweitzer with Little Shell Tribal Chairman John Gilbert after a meeting in the Governor's Reception Room at the State Capitol in Helena

Governor Schweitzer has fulfilled his promise to meet regularly with tribes not only in Helena but in their home communities - Governors to come may not. The law ensures his practice will continue long after he is gone.

At the first meeting with tribal leaders in Helena, the State developed a long agenda addressing the issues of importance to the State. It had a strict timeframe, with limited opportunity for interaction between the Tribes and the State officials. It was the way business with tribes had been conducted for decades. The Governor insisted it be changed after he listened to the tribal leaders as they asked for their issues to be heard. In 2007, the Montana Legislature passed and the Governor signed into law House Bill 105. It was a clarification bill addressing a 2003 law which requires the Governor to meet annually with tribal officials and include representatives of state agencies. It also expanded the language to include addressing tribal and state concerns and most importantly, discussing potential solutions.

"You will learn a whole lot more if you just sit and listen for just a little while." – Governor Brian Schweitzer

Governor Schweitzer and State representatives meet with the Northern Cheyenne Tribal Council during the annual Tribal Leaders Summit held at the State Capitol in Helena

"I have met with Governor Schweitzer. I believe he has done more for Montana, including the enhancement of the government to government relationship between the Tribes and the State, than any other Governor in the State's history."

- Rick Kirn, Former Fort Peck Tribal Councilman

Over the past few years, the Governor has set aside an entire day to meet with each tribe individually to discuss items the Tribe has identified. He asks key staff and cabinet members to join him for the issues that pertain to their work area. The meetings begin in a good way with the Governor extending an offer to the tribal leadership to offer prayer or smudge. He then listens and his staff does the same, while taking notes to make sure items presented have appropriate follow up and are hopefully brought to resolution.

When the official business is done, tribal leaders have been invited to join the Governor and the First Lady at their home for dinner and conversation. In 2009, a reception was held at the Montana Historical Society the evening before the official Tribal Leaders Summit. Some years, lunch is served in the Hall of Governors where everyone enjoys a meal, conversation and some laughter, just like it would be done in a reservation community.

TRIBAL RELATIONS TRAINING

According to Montana law, training for "state agency managers and key employees who have regular communication with tribes on the legal status of tribes, the legal rights of tribal members, and social, economic, and cultural issues of concern to tribes" must occur on an annual basis §§2-15-143(1), MCA.

"I would have never imagined that leaders in state government and tribal officials would be here together learning about each other so we can better cooperate."

- Steve Lozar, Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes Councilman

"I had no knowledge of how to approach the Tribes. I am now more prepared." – 2011 Tribal Relations Training Attendee

The trainings under the direction of the Governor's Office have informed state employees by demonstrating concrete examples of success found within state government. Successful state-tribal partnerships and negotiations to improve delivery of services are showcased.

Most importantly, the trainings include the voices of tribal people and the ways of tribal communities such as honoring the United States at the beginning of each event, starting with good words and prayer and sharing food and gifts. The intent of the training is to ensure that state employees have the tools to be more effective in doing their work with tribes.

This training requirement was transferred from the Department of Justice to the Governor's Office during the Schweitzer Administration, and implemented with vigor as it became a vital aspect of the Governor's promise to improve the relationship between the State and the Tribes.

State employees are the ambassadors of state policies implemented in Indian Country across Montana. The effectiveness and quality of the services delivered rest with them. Training of state employees on the basis of the unique relationship, legal status and circumstances of Indian tribes is key to their success.

University of Montana Lady Griz Coach Robin Selvig served as keynote speaker at the 2008 Tribal Relations Training held in Helena

"We ask you today to take the time to understand their world and appreciate the values they hold deep in their core . . . the respect for the land, for their elders and for their precious children who are the future of their tribe."

– Governor Brian Schweitzer

Tribal Relations Report

Governor Schweitzer promised to improve communication between the State of Montana and the Tribes on the day in 2005 when he was sworn in as the 23rd Governor of Montana.

Corwin "Corky" Clairmont and Linda King, artists and enrolled members of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes, speak about the meaning of having their work included in the Governor's 2011 Tribal Relations Report (Photo by Ian McEwen)

As he gathered with leaders of the eight tribal governments on day one, he assured tribal leaders his office would engage them in different ways in a consistent and ongoing manner. This included visits to reservations by the Governor, asking his key staff and cabinet members to go to tribal communities, inviting tribal leaders to Helena for formal tribal consultations on prominent issues, and having personal phone calls and visits as needed.

Another way to ensure the Governor's communication commitment was fulfilled was by publishing the annual Tribal Relations Report. The Governor's Office of Indian Affairs is the lead in producing the report and once published, staff often hand-delivers the report to each tribal government.

"Art is a very valuable tool. I choose to use it to express and show the beauty of the culture of Native Americans. It meant a lot to me to be asked to be a part of this year's report."

– Allen Knows His Gun, Crow Artist

Intended to promote and strengthen communication between the State of Montana and Tribal Nations, the Tribal Relations Report is a result of the legislation passed in the 2003 legislature that requires an annual report to tribal governments describing the government to government activities between the State of Montana and the Tribes by September 15 of each year. While mandated in state law, for the Schweitzer Administration it was simply the right thing to do.

Before the Report could be written, the Governor needed a way to gather information across state agencies in a consistent manner. Therefore, the State Tribal Activities Database was created. Staff throughout state government were trained on the types of activities to submit for inclusion in to the Agency directors were asked to Report. provide policies implemented and activities conducted throughout the year to highlight the Governor's promise to Indian people.

With information and a selection of a prominent Indian artist, the Tribal Relations Report has progressed from a plain document to a colorful compilation of stories, pictures and quotes reflecting the growth in the relationship of the State of Montana and the Tribes and tribal people over the time of the Schweitzer Administration.

The covers of each of the reports are displayed to show those produced under the Schweitzer Administration. They can be accessed on the Governor's Office of Indian Affairs website located at http://tribalnations.mt.gov/trreports.asp.

GOVERNOR APPOINTMENTS

Governors in Montana appoint hundreds of Montanans to serve on boards, councils and commissions. Each of the board missions differ. The expertise and knowledge of appointees is vast and expands the Governor's ability to reach all across Montana.

> "Having differing perspectives at the table makes for a healthier discussion and in the end, better decisions."

> > – Governor Brian Schweitzer

Some of these boards provide guidance and set policies, such as the Board of Regents for the Montana University System and the Transportation Commission for the Montana Department of Transportation. Other councils and commissions may provide advice to the Governor on a variety of topics ranging from the management of noxious weeds to promoting their vision for economic development in Montana. All of them help to set the direction of the State.

Reuben Mathias, Burial Preservation Board Chair and Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribal Councilman, visits with Governor Schweitzer in the State Capitol

The Governor committed to honor the diversity of the State including geography, gender, sexual orientation, disability and certainly race as selection for boards and commissions are made. He promised to include Native Americans in state government in the decision making processes and kept that promise by appointing more Indians to Montana's Boards and Commissions than all of the previous 22 Governors combined.

The inclusion of Indians in state government provides the unique opportunity for individuals to share their perspective, knowledge, and vision for a more efficient state government.

Never before had an Indian chaired the Transportation Commission or served on the Fish, Wildlife and Parks Commission but for the past eight years, it has been common practice. With these essential voices heard as decisions are made by the boards and commissions, Montana is better.

"I was invited through the Governor's Office to be a part of an advisory committee for workforce development. I really appreciated the confidence they had in me to have a voice for Indian people. I was honored to serve in that capacity."

- Dr. David Yarlott, President, Little Big Horn College

There have also been opportunities for the Governor to make appointments and special acknowledgements, such as in September 2009 when he appointed Henry "Hank" Real Bird as Montana's Poet Laureate. In recognition of exceptional talent and accomplishment, the role of Poet Laureate is to encourage appreciation of poetry and literacy in Montana through readings and presentations and making poetry available to a statewide audience.

Leon Weider of Arlee was awarded the Governor's Service Award for 2011 through the Governor's Office of Community Service for his efforts to raise money for cancer patients. "Spur the Cancer Out of Montana" was started by Weider in honor of his aunt who lost a nine year battle with cancer.

Governor John Bohlinger

In 2008, Jack Gladstone, Blackfeet storyteller and lecturer, served as Montana Tribal Liaison and spokesperson for the U.S. Capitol Tree Lighting Event in Washington, DC. Montana provided the 60-plus foot Christmas tree from the Bitterroot National Forest for the event themed "Sharing Montana's Treasures." Jack created and performed the official song of the Christmas tree lighting, "Heart of Montana," as part of the ceremony.

A self taught artist and an enrolled member of the Northern Cheyenne Tribe, Alaina Buffalo Spirit was selected by the Governor's Office to create Montana's Christmas ornaments for the 2011 National Christmas Tree display and the tree in the U.S. Capitol Visitor Center in Washington, DC. To help create the ornaments, she chose students in an art class from Chief Dull Knife College in Lame Deer.

The following section lists the more than 250 gubernatorial appointments that have been made since Governor Schweitzer took office in January 2005.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Promises Made, Promises Kept 33

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

"As we advance Montana's economic and job development, our commitment to job creation in Indian Country must continue to be a priority. We have strengthened the state's commitment to this over the last eight years, putting people, programs and funding in place to advance the cause. It is my hope that this strong commitment will continue in succeeding Administrations. Indian Country deserves no less."

- Governor Brian Schweitzer

Walter White Tail Feather, Fort Peck Economic Development Director, and Energy Development Specialist Chantel Schieffer from the Department of Commerce visit about a proposed renewable energy project during a meeting at the tribal headquarters in Poplar facility. The grant was used to renovate the building and create a place where tribal members could sell their arts and crafts to travelers along Highway 212. The economic benefit of this facility is enormous as jobs were created to manage the facility and to hire sales clerks. Now there is a place where local artisans can sell their crafts.

The Crow Tribe created the Apsáalooke Nation Revolving Fund with ICED funds when it was identified there was a lack of financing for small businesses in Crow Country. Started in 2006 and continuing today, the Crow Tribe has established a healthy revolving loan fund to provide financing opportunities not readily accessible in Indian Country. The foremost promise made by Governor Brian Schweitzer was to work with tribal governments to build the economic infrastructure in Indian Country. It was highlighted during the transition in 2004 and continued throughout the Administration. Indian Country expressed the need for a partnership between the State of Montana and Tribal Governments. Governor Schweitzer listened to the Tribes and promised to work together, government to government, for economic development on each reservation.

The cornerstone of the Governor's policy is the Indian Country Economic Development (ICED) program located within the Montana Department of Commerce. Grants are awarded to fund economic priority projects proposed by the tribes and strategically invests in strengthening the economies of tribal communities.

The Indian Country Economic Development program has funded a number of successful enterprises over the past eight years. A sampling of these projects follow.

The Northern Cheyenne Tribe used ICED funding for the Northern Cheyenne Arts, Crafts and Cultural Tourism

Governor Schweitzer, Northern Cheyenne President Leroy Spang and Tribal Attorney Steve Chestnut share some laughs while visiting with Steven Leer, Chairman of Arch Coal, at the Tribal Headquarters in Lame Deer

"The Fort Peck Tribes have had tremendous success with the Indian Country Economic Development fund. We have been able to leverage the dollars to obtain additional funding for projects like a new building in our industrial park to the improvement of an old rail spur. Both of these projects brought new development and ultimately new jobs to the Fort Peck Reservation."

- Walter White Tail Feather, Economic Development Director for the Fort Peck Tribes

Little River Smokehouse employees, Rebecca "Bea" Clark and Harold "Jiggs" Main, serving customers at the Little River Smokehouse at Fort Belknap Agency

The Assiniboine and Gros Ventre Tribes of the Fort Belknap Reservation initially used ICED to fund the startup of the Little River Smokehouse to produce specialty smoke meats made primarily of buffalo meat for products such as jerky, summer sausage, snack sticks and spicy sausage. Subsequent ICED grants have helped the Fort Belknap Indian Community expand the "Smokehouse" brand. There is now a Smokehouse Grill that features Smokehouse meat products on the menu and in 2011, the Tribes established the Smokehouse Java and Smokehouse Grocery, selling the specialty meats. Governor Schweitzer distributed donated Little River Smokehouse products when he traveled to New York City and promoted Montana in Times Square. Smokehouse jerky was shared with the hosts on a MSNBC morning show.

"During the Schweitzer Administration, the Montana Department of Commerce provided the first consistent, state-funded economic development source for tribal government and Native-owned businesses in Montana's history. We are committed to supporting our local economies and empowering Native-owned businesses."

- Dore Schwinden, Director of the Montana Department of Commerce

Other projects funded with Indian Country Economic Development grants have included:

Through the Blackfeet Manpower program, the Blackfeet Tribe utilized some of their early ICED funds to complete disaster training for 500 individuals to become certified to be able to respond to FEMA disasters. Shortly after training these certified responders, they were deployed to hurricane Katrina.

The Chippewa Cree Tribe of the Rocky Boy's Reservation used their ICED funds for the training of nine tribal members to become Certified Nurses Aide's to provide care services to housebound and elderly clients. In addition, a tribal member was trained as a tribal veteran's representative to assist Chippewa Cree veterans with obtaining VA benefits such as service connected disability payments and health care services.

The Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes of the Flathead Reservation used ICED funds when a business lease trainee was trained to evaluate tribal properties for their best usage. A market analysis of the tribe's small diameter woods was also analyzed to determine appropriate commercial value and usage of this timber inventory.

The Assiniboine and Sioux Tribes of the Fort Peck Reservation invested a portion of their funds into an oilfield services feasibility analysis whereby Fort Peck Tech services could provide oil pipe rethreading services to the drilling operations currently drilling in the Bakken oil area.

The Little Shell Chippewa Tribe utilized ICED funds to have a timber analysis performed on a piece of property they own located in Flathead County.

Crucial to the Governor's economic success in Indian Country was working closely with the State Tribal Economic Development Commission (STED), whose members are recommended by the tribes and appointed by the Governor. The Commission opened and cultivated the lines of communication between the State and the Tribes on this critical mission.

In fact, the Governor's Office of Economic Development (GOED) has a member on the Commission itself and actively participates in all Commission activity from the Governor's level. Throughout the Administration, GOED, along with the Montana Department of Commerce, have had Native American staff members specifically focused on Indian Country economic development and have worked hard to make STED and ICED permanent, including their funding.

The State Tribal Economic Development Commission assisted with a major economic development strategy when $5 million dollars was appropriated to tribes in Montana for infrastructure and energy efficiency projects, known as the

"Had it not been for the Montana Indian Equity Fund, I would not have started A Cheyenne Voice. As a small business person, I commend Governor Schweitzer and his staff for this innovative program that really does stimulate individual business development in Indian Country."

- Clara Caufield, owner of A Cheyenne Voice, a local newspaper now in its 3rd year serving the Northern Cheyenne Reservation and surrounding communities

Tribal Infrastructure and Energy Efficiency Reinvestment Program. From water projects to telecommunication systems, to efficiency renovations of tribal properties, the one-time only funding provided the opportunity to create jobs and improve tribal infrastructure.

Another key component of the economic development strategy for Indian Country was the Montana Indian Equity Fund, providing grant funding for business start-up or expansion for Native American small business owners in reservation communities and those owned but operated off the reservation. Since its inception in 2006, 91 Indian-owned small businesses have been supported, and today 74 remain "open for business."

Indianpreneurship®, another piece that falls under the economic development strategy outlined in the Indian Country Economic Development program, supports Indian businesses with training and technical assistance. This often serves as the precursor to applying for the Montana Indian Equity Fund or a bank loan through a lending institution.

Infrastructure is critical to promoting economic development on reservations. Many tribes, including the Crow and the Blackfeet, have successfully applied for the Treasure State Endowment Program which is administered by the Department of Commerce. Commonly referred to as TSEP, this program is designed to assist communities with the financing of public facilities projects.

Native American artists and craftsmen have long identified the need to market their products and to ensure authenticity of those products. The Montana Department of Commerce listened and worked with tribal members to create the Native American Made in Montana logo and initiative. Now, products made in Montana by enrolled members of a Montana tribe, can utilize the new logo on their products.

A billboard on the Blackfeet Indian Reservation promoting the Native American Made in Montana label

A major goal was accomplished when tribal governments were provided direct access to the Big Sky Trust Fund, a fund aimed at assisting businesses planning activities and job creation. Since 2009, tribes have secured grants and then leveraged the funding of over a half a million dollars for economic development projects. Each of these activities would indicate a policy shift in the State of Montana and tribal governments, but collectively it is a significant change with long lasting impact. Just as in any economic development effort, some of the Tribes' efforts have succeeded and some not but in the end the promise of Montana to be good partners was kept.

"Tribal governments have the opportunity to post their bids on one of the State's most visited websites. By doing so, they can reach an even broader audience of businesses interested in competing to provide supplies and services to their jurisdiction."

- Sheryl Olson, Deputy Director, Department of Administration

Recognizing the opportunity exists to expand the reach of tribal purchasing agents, the State Procurement Bureau in the Department of Administration, extended the use of the State's One-Stop Vendor website to all Montana Tribal Governments. Tribes now have the option to place invitations for bids and requests for proposals on the website, increasing notification to potential service and supply vendors.

Tribal governments also have the ability to take advantage of the volume purchasing of state government by using many of the contracts for commonly used items. Once a tribe has signed up with the State Procurement Bureau, they can utilize these term contracts to acquire a variety of supplies and services which can reduce their operating expenses and simplify their purchasing processes.

The Department of Administration's Architecture and Engineering Division assists other state agencies and is involved in the design, bidding and construction of buildings throughout Montana including the Indian reservations. The Northern Cheyenne Tribe and the Department of Transportation were able to utilize their Tribal Employment Rights Ordinance agreement for a new equipment storage building for the Montana Department of Transportation at the Busby site located on the Northern Cheyenne Reservation.

"The Department works cooperatively with Tribes to increase employment opportunities utilizing TERO MOU's to make certain contractors and subcontractors are aware of tribal employment ordinances on and near reservations, and increase tribal member employment by ensuring projects are constructed with TERO-approved employees."

- Tim Reardon, Director, Director of Transportation

The new Two Medicine Bridge located on the Blackfeet Reservation nears completion - many tribal members were employed during the construction period

When complete, the new building at Busby will provide space for snow plows and other heavy equipment.

Tribal Employment Rights Ordinance (TERO) offices ensure that Native Americans are employed on reservation projects and facilitate business and other economic opportunities.

The Department of Transportation maintains TERO agreements with the Tribal Governments. These agreements require that the department work with TERO offices to set out the hiring and other requirements for highway projects within reservation boundaries. They also require that the department pay a fee based on the department's projects on each reservation. These fees, in part, fund the TERO offices.

The Federal Highway Administration will participate in contracts where TERO fees are used for the identified increased costs of hiring Native American workers for federal aid projects and include job referrals, counseling, placement and training.

The following table shows the amount of revenue the tribes received through revenue sharing and TERO fees in fiscal year 2012.

State-Tribe Reven	State-Tribe Revenue Sharing and TERO Agreements – Fiscal Year 2012
Reservation	Tobacco	Alcohol	Motor Fuels	TERO
Blackfeet	$1,242,363	$207,816	$1,040,733	$579,492
Crow	$1,069,949	N/A	$892,534	$122,734
Flathead	Quota – MCA, 16-11-155	N/A	New Agreement Effective 8/30/2012	$37,390
Fort Belknap	$460,368	$96,987	$375,080	$3,970
Fort Peck	$951,091	$155,313	$777,539	$577,729
Northern Cheyenne	$180,213	N/A	$612,655	$49,274
Rocky Boy's	$526,362	N/A	$442,155	N/A

Tax revenue sharing agreements negotiated between the State of Montana and Tribal Governments help fulfill the Governor's promise to increase long term economic development opportunities on reservations. These agreements are entered into to avoid dual taxation on certain economic transactions including tobacco, alcohol, oil and gas, and motor fuels. Instead, one tax is collected and distributed between the Tribe and the State as outlined in the agreement.

Substantial changes were made to property tax exemption statutes that will have long lasting impact for tribal governments. Collaboration between the State and the tribes ensured the passage of property tax exemptions bills in the 2011 legislative session that will assist tribes when moving tribal lands from fee to trust status. In addition, on tribal fee lands used for essential government services, educational facilities, religious activities, parks and recreation, and cemeteries, tribes now have the ability to apply for exemption from property taxes just as those lands are exempt for local governments and some non-profits. This legislative success is unprecedented in Montana, but respectful collaboration made it possible.

"Revenue sharing agreements prevent double taxation of citizens and replaces potential conflict with cooperation between the Tribes and the State. The Department has made revenue sharing agreements and all Department matters that affect Indian Country a high priority during the Schweitzer Administration, and I feel honored to have been able to work closely with the Tribes."

- Dan Bucks, Director, Department of Revenue

EDUCATION AND TRAINING

Promises Made, Promises Kept 41

EDUCATION AND TRAINING

Governor Schweitzer stops in at the library during his visit to the Northern Cheyenne Reservation

Montana is home to eight tribal nations and seven Indian reservations. There is great diversity among the tribes' culture, traditions, languages and governing. Each has a unique cultural heritage that contributes to Montana.

"If we start early enough, when they are 5 or 6 years old, we can begin to change the heart of our children. And those children will celebrate this culture, one that is so unique to Montana."

- Governor Brian Schweitzer

Governor Schweitzer strongly believes that each of us have a lot to gain from learning about each other's cultures, traditions and histories. Teaching others – children and adults – about who the great Indian leaders were, or how to say the name of a river in the Chippewa language, and about the value of the wildlife and the sacredness of lands to Indian people is essential because the first Montanans are a part of each community across Montana. And while Indians have a history that we can all learn about, they are very much a part of the present and will forever be a part of Montana's future.

"Cultural connections are stronger than ever in our classrooms. Teachers and students explore history through a variety of lenses, understand scientific theories through native ways of knowing and connect our rich past with our present."

Although the Montana Constitution was amended in 1972 to recognize "the distinct and unique cultural heritage of American Indians and to be committed in its educational goals to the preservation of their cultural heritage," funding was never provided for its implementation. Governor Schweitzer changed that. In 2005, he made it a priority and since that time has included in his budget funding for Indian Education for All.

Montana has led the way.

"Your support Governor has brought Indian Education for All to life." – Former State Senator Carol Juneau - Robin Arnold, Bozeman Schools

Governor Schweitzer and Former State Senator Carol Juneau during the Montana Indian Education Association's honoring of the Governor for his commitment and leadership in funding Indian Education for All

Promises Made, Promises Kept 42 Governor Schweitzer wanted "Indian Education for All" to encompass tribal histories as told by tribal peoples. He recognized that an important component of being able to teach others about the Native Americans in Montana would be the fact that Tribal Nations should have the opportunity to tell their own story.

Early in his Administration, he made sure funding was provided through the tribal colleges for tribes to record their own history. These Tribal Histories, some in book form, some in DVD form, are made available to all the schools within the State of Montana.

Education and economic opportunity go hand in hand. Across the state, and in Indian Country, education is the essential foundation for economic development. Students who achieve success in high school often have a desire to explore the benefits of higher education.

In 2007, Governor Schweitzer included $200 per Indian child enrolled in K-12 to help close educational achievement the gap that exists between Indian and non-Indian students so that students can begin to reach their goals.

The Governor invested in Best and Brightest Scholarships to students across Montana, more than one-fifth of which went to native students. Understanding the need that it must be affordable, Governor Schweitzer led the initiative to freeze two-year college tuition for a six-year period.

Tribal colleges exist on every Indian reservation in Montana and provide community members the opportunity to further develop their education while staying close to home. Governor Schweitzer included non-beneficiary funding for tribal colleges to help cover the costs of educating the many non-Indian and non-tribally enrolled Indian students attending tribal colleges.

Montana is leading the nation in the number of students graduating from college and much has been done during the Schweitzer Administration to encourage student success. Through education, Montana citizens are preparing for their role in the future.

"Through the sharing of knowledge and culture, a better understanding and respect can create a more positive dialogue and resulting decisions that can best benefit our Montana Indian communities and Montana as a whole."

The value of education and training is immeasurable. Together, they build a foundation in which individuals can begin to set a path for their own future.

Jobs for Montana's Graduates (JMG), a program designed to recognize barriers and help students become better prepared for what lies beyond high school, has offered Native Americans some great success in schools on Indian reservations, in bordering towns and in urban areas. Nationally recognized for meeting the five performance goals year after year, Montana's 92% graduation rate for Indian students involved in the JMG program have encouraged many to either attain meaningful employment or continue with their higher education upon their high school graduation.

"The success rate of the JMG program is phenomenal. I would like to thank all the dedicated teachers and students."

- Governor Brian Schweitzer

Former Blackfeet Chairman Earl Old Person and Working Friends One–Stop Director George Kipp accept a plaque from Labor Commissioner Keith Kelly for being the first ever certified Native American One–Stop Center

To gain additional skills, it is important that job seekers have the ability to access education, training and support services in their local community. In 2007, the "Working Friends" One Stop Center located on the Blackfeet Reservation became the first designated Native American One-Stop. In that same year, the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes became a signatory partner in the Mission Valley One-Stop Workforce System. These collaborative efforts in the end help individuals attain self-sufficiency and independence.

When gathering information on potential occupations and completing skill assessments, the Department of Labor and Industry's Montana Career Information System (MCIS) can be a useful tool for those residing in rural communities. Nearly all of the tribal colleges in Montana have signed user agreements for their students to be able to utilize this valuable on-line information system.

"My parents taught us that education is our passport to a better life for our families, for ourselves and for our tribe."

- Major Robinson, Northern Cheyenne Tribal Member and Montana University System Board of Regents

For companies interested in doing business in Montana, accessing data that details the economic and demographic picture of a particular area and understanding the availability and quality of the workforce is critical to their decision making. In 2008, the State Tribal Economic Development Commission worked closely with the Department of Commerce and Department of Labor and Industry to update and publish the Reservation Economic Fliers for each of the seven reservations and the state-recognized Little Shell Tribe of Montana. These fliers are available at http://www.ourfactsyourfuture.org/.

HEALTH AND SAFETY

Promises Made, Promises Kept 45

HEALTH AND SAFETY

The Department of Public Health and Human Services (DPHHS) is the largest agency in state government with over 3,100 employees, an annual budget of nearly $2 billion dollars, and almost 2,500 contractual agreements with partners in every community across the state. DPHHS has many agreements with the eight tribal governments in Montana.

"The Master Agreements streamline the partnership between the Tribes and the Department to improve the efficiency of health services to Indian people — the quality, the reimbursements, and most importantly, the government to government relationship."

These agreements, grants and contracts guide the relationship between DPHHS and the tribal governments so services like Medicaid and Healthy Montana Kids (HMK) health services, foster care, cancer prevention and energy assistance to name just a few, can be provided in reservation communities. Upon examination of the agreements guiding the delivery of these services, it was clear there was not a single or coordinated approach directing the government to government relationship between DPHHS and the tribes.

The tribes told DPHHS that agreements were administered many different ways, sometimes in conflict with each other, without a justifiable rationale. With clear direction from the Schweitzer Administration through the Governor's American Indian Nations Council (GAIN), DPHHS determined a coordinated approach, led by the Director, was needed. DPHHS Master Agreements were developed as a way to ensure a consistent application of policies, rules and regulations while honoring the government to government relationship. – Dan Belcourt, Chippewa Cree Tribal Attorney

DPHHS Director Anna Whiting Sorrell leads a discussion on proposed Medicaid program changes at a Tribal Consultation meeting held in Helena

During the Governor's Tribal Leaders Summit in May 2011, Governor Schweitzer asked that agency directors work with tribes to establish long lasting agreements. DPHHS responded by engaging Tribal Councils in negotiations for a contract the legal defining parameters of partnership that is to be applied across the department. This allows time for discussions to determine tribal specific services to be delivered, timeframes and funding.

The seven federally recognized tribes have approved the Master Agreements and work continues to develop a meaningful contractual arrangement with the state recognized Little Shell Tribe. "I believe the most important tribal activity I have worked on during my time as Director of DPHHS is negotiating on a true government to government basis the Master Agreement describing how business will be conducted between our governments. It will remove uncertainties about how services are delivered and honors our tribal partners."

- Anna Whiting Sorrell, Director, Department of Public Health and Human Services

The DPHHS and tribal relationship also expands into health coverage through the state's Medicaid program. Native Americans are the largest minority population in the State of Montana, often residing in some of the most remote locations with limited access to medical care resulting in disparate health care and outcomes.

"We should all be proud of the partnerships we have made with the tribal governments and tribal programs on such an important topic as health care. Working together we can provide a better service."

- Governor Brian Schweitzer

Most Indians residing on any one of the seven reservations in Montana are covered by Indian Health Service, but they are also state citizens and are eligible to be served by many of the health programs provided by DPHHS. This includes Medicaid and the Children's Health Insurance Program known in Montana as Healthy Montana Kids (HMK).

During the 2005 Legislative session, funds were included in the DPHHS budget to employ a Tribal Medicaid liaison. The liaison duties were to increase the number of Indians enrolled in the two programs and to improve the billing capacity of Indian Health Service and Tribal Health departments, thus ensuring improved access to Montanans most in need of care. This fits well with the direction of the Schweitzer Administration.

Given the importance of these responsibilities in 2009, the position was relocated to the Director's Office to be integrated appropriately throughout DPHHS where Medicaid and HMK services are delivered.

Ian McEwen (center), DPHHS Tribal Medicaid liaison, shown here handing out copies of a recent DPHHS Tribal Relations report at the Rocky Mountain Tribal Health Conference

"Both Montana Tribes and DPHHS staff are committed to improving the health of Montana's Indian population. Medicaid funding for tribal health services is a primary vehicle to achieve this goal. Montana Tribes have been incredibly open to working with us to develop new payment methodologies and we are thankful for the many hours that they have spent working with us. We have made an impressive start and I look forward to making further strides in the next few years."

- Mary Dalton, DPHHS Medicaid and Health Services Branch Manager

Major accomplishments since the transition include the negotiation of an agreement between Indian Health Service (IHS) and DPHHS, including a requirement in the pharmacy reimbursement process to reduce the potential of abuse of prescription drugs and improve billing options. DPHHS, upon consultation with the IHS and Tribal governments, changed the billing methodology from a single payment per day to a fee for service for each eligible service provided.

Kim Traversie and Neal Rosette of the Chippewa Cree Tribe brief Governor Schweitzer on the damage to the Rocky Boy's Health Clinic caused by the 2010 flood

For the first time, Tribal Health departments have engaged in a contractual arrangement DPHHS for Medicaid with billing Through ongoing training and purposes. communication, all seven of the reservations are actively pursuing increased funding opportunities by providing Medicaid eligible services by Medicaid eligible providers to Medicaid recipients. Most importantly, through this new government to government relationship, DPHHS has identified many opportunities for unique delivery and expanded services.

Another area critical to the State and tribal relationship is the state's commitment to provide assistance when disaster strikes. A priority of the Schweitzer Administration has been ensuring public safety in all corners of the State of Montana, including for tribal members on Montana's reservations.

"When citizens who happen to live on the Indian reservations have been impacted by circumstances out of their control, I'm proud to say the State of Montana has been able to step up with a helping hand."

- Governor Brian Schweitzer

The cornerstone demonstrating this cooperative effort is the extension of the Governor's Emergency Fund to tribal governments. Based on an attorney general's opinion, Tribes were excluded from accessing this essential assistance during the times of devastating need such as wildland fires, flood and disaster due to inclement weather. The Administration conducted an exhaustive legal review and came to the conclusion that the only way for Tribes to be treated like other governments in Montana was to change Montana's statutes.

In 2011, with the support of tribal governments, HB 279 was passed and signed by the Governor. Its passage was timely in that many tribes including the Crow and Northern Cheyenne experienced major flooding in that same spring and accessing these funds aided in the recovery.

Working together to promote public safety has been a priority throughout the Administration as highlighted by the joint effort between the Department of Public Health and Human Services during the HINI influenza pandemic in 2009. Since 2001, DPHHS has actively engaged tribal partners to support public health emergency preparedness and response efforts on every reservation.

"It will be those relationships that we have spent the time to build, that will get us through the difficult times." – Governor Brian Schweitzer

H1N1 influenza During the pandemic, it was essential that State, county, city-county and tribal agencies worked together to ensure the public was immunized according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's standards. As plans were operationalized, it was apparent that the State needed to strengthen its relationships with the Indian Health Service and Tribal Health Departments and to serve as a conduit to the other governmental entities. The end result was that one tribal health department had the highest immunization rate of all agencies involved in the state.

These emergency planning and response efforts were also utilized during the response to the Spring 2011 flooding. Again, DPHHS worked closely with tribal officials, Indian Health Service officials, state and local disaster and emergency services staff and volunteer organizations to support the needs of displaced families. Over 250 individuals from the Crow reservation were displaced, many for weeks, and hundreds more required food as a result of being cut off from services by flood waters.

Through the combined efforts of DPHHS, its state and local partners, and the support of the Governor's Office of Indian Affairs, thousands of meals and a safe place to sleep were provided to those in need. Montana's Voluntary Organizations Active in Disaster (VOAD) partners who were key in securing the manpower, food and shelter, successfully worked with state agencies to coordinate the delivery of services.

HEALTH AND SAFETY

The overrepresentation of Native Americans in the criminal justice system in Montana has been an issue since the start of the Administration, with an increasing utilization of locked facilities. Not only was it an issue with devastating consequences for victims and families, it also had a serious impact on the State's budget. The Governor took on the issue by setting a policy direction for the Montana Department of Corrections emphasizing community services, not secure beds, while making safety the number one priority.

With this new direction, services for incarcerated Native Americans shifted in a direction to maintain and strengthen ties to tribal families and communities. The former warden Mike Mahoney worked diligently to revise the policy for visitation when a close family member is dying or to attend a family funeral, recognizing the cultural importance to Indian people. Now, inmates identify their close family relationships upon entry and should misfortune occur while they are incarcerated, processes are in place to ensure inmate participation according to an agreed upon procedure.

It has been demonstrated that (PROVO by Jon EDEN) maintaining and strengthening Native American cultural ties while incarcerated improves outcomes when the inmate is released. Efforts such as talking circles and sweats have been incorporated and valued as integral to the rehabilitation services of the correctional facilities.

Montana DEPARTMENT of TRANSPORTATION Native American Traffic Safety

"Keeping communities safe and families connected is important."

- Mike Ferriter, Director, Department of Corrections

Launched in 2006, Safe On All Roads (SOAR) is a partnership between the Montana Department of Transportation and the tribes in Montana. Tribal coordinators work to promote traffic safety on the seven Indian reservations in Montana. SOAR is a significant link in the effort to reduce crash deaths and injuries among the state's Native American populations. The campaigns are kept local and feature local families to push the message close to home such as driving safe, family safety and the importance of buckling up.

In addition to all the work that takes place behind the scenes, there's also a vast amount of work that takes place in the public forum.

DPHHS and the tribes have partnered on various media campaigns over the past many years. The use of media and messages to change behavior and improve health outcomes is a proven strategy. Seeing yourself in a poster, commercial or billboard is very effective. DPHHS uses these tools to meet the challenge of reducing the disparate health outcomes for Montana's largest minority group.

Respected tribal elders Ruby and Videl Stump stand with the Healthy Montana Kids poster they were featured on representing the Chippewa Cree Tribe

The first example used a lesson learned from tribal partners on Healthy Montana Kids (HMK). Native American children were targeted to increase their enrollment in HMK. DPHHS consulted with the tribes and learned the best way to engage tribal families was to create a message that was culturally appropriate and specific for each tribe.

DPHHS listened and the HMK Respected Elders Campaign began. Posters, featuring a tribal elder identified by the tribe and a tribal specific quote, were created for each reservation. The outcome was clear, as enrollment for Indian children increased nearly ten percent.

"Healthy Northern Cheyenne children will carry the tribe into the future. Healthy elders instill the traditions and show the way. Having the children enrolled with Healthy Montana Kids strengthens the whole tribe."

- Mary Underwood, Northern Cheyenne Tribal Elder

The Public Health and Safety Division in DPHHS is using a similar model with Tobacco Prevention efforts.

Once again, after extensive tribal consultation, each tribal government was provided funding to implement evidence-based activities to reduce commercial tobacco use. Each tribe chose from an array of options but all used tribal specific messaging, including bill boards, newsletters, and banners with the general theme "Remember Who You Are."

Tuffy, Dalee and baby Tadaya Helgeson of the Fort Belknap Reservation were featured in a recent Tobacco Quit Line media campaign

"Our ancestors did not fight to protect our traditions for us to die of lung cancer from commercial tobacco. We are the seventh generation and the time has come to honor our ancestors' sacrifices."

- Tuffy Helgeson, Fort Belknap

This same methodology was used for various Cardiovascular Health Program media campaigns focusing on stroke awareness and heart health. One recent campaign focused on increasing awareness of the warning signs for stroke and the need to call 911 emergency medical services among the Blackfeet tribal community. The Cardiovascular Health Program collaborated with the Blackfeet Tribal Health Department to design and implement this activity. Posters, radio ads, billboards and newspaper ads were created that featured the theme 'Stroke Storm Watch' and incorporated a buffalo image.

Including Indian people and Indian symbols in general ads used statewide was another strategy to improve health messaging to Native Americans. A highlight was the "Raise Your Voice" campaign to reduce child abuse and neglect and raise awareness about the toll-free child abuse hotline.

"Child abuse is an issue found all over the nation and Montana is no different. We were honored the Ronan area children were willing to help us out with this project."

- Sarah Corbally, Child and Family Services Division Administrator

One often hears that Indians aren't included in State public relations because pictures don't exist. To remedy that situation, DPHHS worked with the Salish Kootenai College on the Flathead Reservation where over 30 tribal nations are represented. A photo shoot yielded great pictures of Montana that is reflective of all Montanans.

Native children from Helena were also photographed for the recently launched No Kid Hungry initiative.

Whether you are driving Montana highways and backroads or watching Montana television or listening to a country radio station, the sights and sounds of Montana including tribes is now a key part of the media message.

NATURAL RESOURCES

NATURAL RESOURCES

"This historic land exchange between the State of Montana and the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes speaks to the true meaning of working together on projects that provide mutual benefit to both sovereigns."

- Governor Brian Schweitzer

The property owned by the State of Montana, or what is better known as "state lands" are located throughout Montana. As manager of these lands, the Department of Natural Resources and Conservation works to help ensure that Montana's land and water resources provide benefits for present and future generations. Tribes share this same commitment of their tribal resources.

So it was a momentous day on the 16th day of June 2010 when the first-ever land exchange was completed between the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes and the State of Montana. The land exchange involved tribally owned land located outside the Flathead Reservation boundaries, and State trust land in-holdings, some of which were located within the South Fork Jocko Primitive Area. The primitive area, one that is truly pristine, is of utmost significance to the Tribes. This land exchange is the first step in an effort to consolidate land ownership for both the Tribe and the State.

"Land exchanges between State trust lands and the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes reap rewards for the school children of Montana who gain increased funding for education and tribal members who gain ownership of important, sacred lands. Land exchanges are truly "win-win" transactions." – Mary Sexton, Director, Department of Natural Resources and Conservation

Since 2005, Governor Schweitzer has worked closely with the tribes and the state legislature to affirm Indian water rights and improve water delivery infrastructure for rural Montana.

In 2009, the Blackfeet water compact was passed and signed by Governor Schweitzer and monies were also appropriated in support of the Fort Belknap water compact.

The Montana Reserved Water Rights Compact Commission and the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes are hoping to finalize negotiations in 2012 as they are committed to concluding a settlement that allows the ratification of the compact by the State during the 2013 legislative session.

The Department of Environmental Quality continues to work with the Fort Belknap Tribes on the reclamation of the Zortman-Landusky mine sites and the Swift Gulch drainage.

Efforts include reclaiming the leach pads and waste dumps, and improving the water treatment system in Swift Gulch.

Standing in front of the Water Treatment facility on the Fort Belknap Reservation, Governor Schweitzer and Fort Belknap President Tracy King are briefed by Department of Environmental Quality staff about the water treatment process occurring at this Swift Gulch drainage site

Destruction occurred in the spring of 2011 when flooding damaged the capture system. Efforts will continue to be made to protect the water quality that flows on to the reservation from these sites.

"We must stay strong in our conviction to ensure that every community in Montana is equipped with clean and safe drinking water. Our health depends upon it."

- Governor Brian Schweitzer

Governor Schweitzer selected Bruce Measure and Rhonda Whiting as his appointees to the Northwest Power Conservation and Council (NPCC). Councilmember Whiting, an enrolled member of the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes, was the first Native American appointed to serve on the Council and has served in this capacity through the entire Administration and, in the final year, as the Council's Chairperson. Together with Councilmember Measure, they have focused on the management of the Columbia River Basin as the Governor directed all his cabinet members to include an appropriate partnership with CSKT, the only tribe in Montana located in the basin area.

In 2006. Governor Brian Schweitzer, the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes, and others announced approximately $10.7 million in funding for a land acquisition and a conservation easement in the Swan Valley to secure key habitat for bull trout and other fish and wildlife. The Tribe was the key player in this project, especially in the $9.6 million for the acquisition of about 640 acres in the Elk Creek drainage at the southern end of the Swan Valley. In 2011, CSKT received approximately $4 million dollars for land acquisitions and conservation easements in the Flathead.

The Council is currently undergoing a resident fish project review in 2012, including all of the projects associated with the CSKT. The outcome of the review will result in steady funding to CSKT for land acquisitions, coordination, and Hungry Horse mitigation for years to come.

"Over the past eight years, the impact made by efforts to ensure that Montana's interests in the Columbia Basin are protected have been significant."

- Rhonda Whiting, CSKT Member and Northwest Power and Conservation Council Chair

Many Montana State Parks landscapes include sites that are a vital, living history of Montana's first people. The Governor's promise to include Native Americans in all aspects of state government has benefitted tribal involvement at these sacred sites, and brought new value and richness to Montana's state parks. Tribal members and elders bring their cultural knowledge and wisdom to state parks events and activities, and are frequent guest speakers.

Listed on the National Register of Historic Places is the First Peoples Buffalo Jump State Park near Great Falls. This area is of significant importance to many of the tribes in Montana and over the years, the size of the park has been increased and the facilities continue to be improved. In 2007, the park went through a name change so that it was more descriptive and recognized the gathering and place of peace that it is. In an effort to pay homage to the buffalo and the people who honor this mighty animal, the First Peoples Buffalo Jump has developed an on-site education center that includes buffalo culture exhibits, a classroom, a bookstore and a storytelling circle.

In October 2008, the Confederated Salish and Kootenai Tribes, the Montana Department of Transportation, and the Montana Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks, dedicated a new historical marker located on Highway 83, just south of Holland Lake, commemorating the Swan Massacre of 1908.

"We will never forget this place. We never forget their sacrifice for their beliefs, their customs, and that we need to learn from them and pass them on to the future generations."

- Tony Incashola, Director Salish - Pend d'Oreille Culture Committee (attending the 2008 dedication)

This is the site of the tragic encounter that occurred between a Montana game warden and a Pend d'Oreille hunting party from the Flathead Indian Reservation. To fulfill our promise to honor sacred places, State of Montana officials joined tribal representatives on this special day in October to memorialize this 100 year old event.

"As we manage the vast resources in Montana, it is important that Fish, Wildlife and Parks work cooperatively with the Tribes to build a relationship of respect and mutual understanding."

- Mike Volesky, Deputy Director, Montana Fish, Wildlife and Parks

Chief Plenty Coups State Park near Pryor celebrates an annual "Day of Honor" each autumn, recognizing Chief Plenty Coups, last traditional chief of the Apsáalooke Crow people. The event brings members of the community together in this sacred place to honor the legacy of Chief Plenty Coups. He and his wife Strikes-The-Iron directed that, upon their passing, their log home and farmstead located on the Crow Indian Reservation in south central Montana become a place for all cultures to come together in a cooperative spirit.

On the Day of Honor, spiritual leaders and tribal experts share their knowledge, the Crow people celebrate their youth, participants gain appreciation for the culture, and everyone shares in a traditional buffalo feast to mark the occasion.

"This is our national treasure."

STATE-TRIBAL AGREEMENTS

Intergovernmental cooperation serves the interests of all Montana citizens while ensuring respect for the sovereign authority of both governments, state and tribal.

The State Tribal Cooperative Agreements Act, §§18-11-101, et seq., MCA enables and promotes state-tribal cooperation with regard to mutually beneficial activities and services. This Act also provides for tax revenue sharing to prevent the possibility of dual taxation by governments while promoting state, local and tribal economic development.

When Governor Brian Schweitzer took office in 2005, there was no record of the government to government activities and agreements that were in effect between the state and tribes. It was determined a statewide record was needed. The "State Tribal Activities Database (STAD)" was created to serve this purpose.

The State Tribal Activities Database details and records the major state-tribal cooperative work. It includes hundreds of agreements or cooperative projects in effect between the Tribes and the State of Montana. Examples would be revenue sharing agreements, Tribal Employment Rights Ordinances MOU's, contracts and grants just to name a few. The collaborative efforts demonstrate the commitment of the State of Montana to building strong partnerships with tribal nations.

The Appendix "A" which follows displays a comprehensive list of over 450 state-tribal agreements, negotiations and collaborative efforts that were in effect during the course of fiscal year 2012. Generated from the State Tribal Activities Database, the list is developed from data inputted by staff in each of the state agencies throughout state government. The Governor's Office oversees it and uses the information on a daily basis.

The Governor's Office would like to thank the database users for their dedicated efforts to keep the database information current year round.

IT'S A TEAM EFFORT

Over the past eight years, a remarkable effort has been made by the entire Schweitzer Administration to produce an annual Tribal Relations Report that is easy to read, informative and useful, and one that reflects the Administration's work throughout all of Indian Country in Montana.

The production of the annual report involves significant planning and much collaboration in order to gather information, pictures and notable events that have occurred across all of state government during the reporting period.

Critical to this process is the work done by the narrative coordinators and the State Tribal Activities Database (STAD) users located in each state agency. With support and guidance from their agency director, they make a tremendous effort to provide the information requested by the Governor's Office that allows this report to be developed and published each year by September 15. Their contributions are invaluable and key to a successful report.

Once the information is received from state agencies, a core team of individuals led by the Governor's Office of Indian Affairs goes to work on putting together a comprehensive report - one that has a fresh look and over the years, has had differing themes.

The core team involved in putting together this year's report, the final report of the Schweitzer Administration, includes:

- Anna Whiting Sorrell, Director of the Department of Public Health and Human Services and GAIN Co-Chair,
- Lesa Evers, Acting Director, Governor's Office of Indian Affairs,
- Guylaine Gelinas, Administrative Staff to the GAIN Council,
- Rhonda Fenner, Administrative Staff to the Office of Indian Affairs, and
- Casey Greenwood, Graphic Designer and Layout at the Department of Labor and Industry.

The Governor's Office would like to give a heartfelt thanks to all of those who have dedicated their time and effort to producing a high quality report, year after year. It truly is a team effort.

We would also like to give special recognition to Casey Greenwood. Casey's incredible talent, infectious energy, and his amazing ability to guide us all to the end with great calmness deserves recognition.

400 copies of this public document were printed by the Montana Department of Labor & Industry at an estimated cost of $10.16 each for a total of $4,064 for printing and $.00 for distribution.

An avid Pittsburgh Steelers fan, Casey Greenwood shows off his custom-made dream catcher which was given to him as gift for his dedication to assisting the Schweitzer Administration with the annual Tribal Relations Report (Photo by Chuck Council)

"Governor Schweitzer, you have placed a value on Indian people in a way that no one else can claim"

– Anna Whiting Sorrell
